JOHNSON IN FORM AT PHILADELPHIA

Star Twirler Is Himself in Last Game of Series With Athletics and McAleer Is Glad—Grows Better as Game Progresses.

By "SENATOR"

BOSTON, April 29.—Walter Johnson, prince of hurriers, breezed through nine innings yesterday, and never gave the White Elephants a chance to do a thing with his benders. He was the real Colossus of the mound.

And Eddie Ainsmith, plucky little lad, was there with the hit that won the game. Getting up from a sick bed and pleading with Manager McAleer for a chance to show his class with his old pal, Johnson, he played first class ball, and landed the bingle that sent McBride and Somerlot across the platter with the two runs that clinched the battle for the Nationals.

Johnson was himself. At first he didn't look very good, but as the game progressed he assumed all the colors of the rainbow for beauty, and those champions bowed their heads in grief as they went out at first, one after the other.

Want to know about that inning when we did it? All right, fans, get ready to yell, to howl, to shriek, for it was a great inning, that seventh. George McBride, our dandy leader, was the first to face Jack Combs, and he waited until he received a donation of the first corner, John Somerlot remembered that he was in the big show, and promptly hammered the pill at Frank Baker. Baker batted it, too, and there were two on. Bill Cunningham hit in front of the pan and Paddy Livingston tossed him out. It was up to Eddie Ainsmith, our hospital patient.

Then Eddie to the bat.

Ainsmith seized his war club and pranced to the plate. He fouled off a ball and then Umpire Mullen called a strike. Combs was working the corners, but our husky catcher couldn't be fooled. Then came the ball right over the middle, right near the celery and olives. Bing—wow—what a swat. The pill danced over the second cushion like a rubber ball and Eddie was on his way to first.

With the crack of the willow McBride hot-footed it for the plate. John Somerlot fired after him as if with wings on his shoes. Olding, to make it all the more pronounced, booted the ball and both Nationals were over the pan and Ainsmith slid into the second station feet first safely. The Nationals were ahead to stay ahead.

Johnson was at all times master of the situation, the only run being a homer that Frank Baker lifted over that right field fence, in the second round. Nine homers have gone over that barrier and Frank has made six of them. After that there was not a thing doing for those swelling champions. Walter buckled down to his task and produced the goods. You know what that means.

Put, say, the Athletics had oodles of chances. Livingston reached third in the third to see Strunk and Olding go out on infield swats. Collins thought he'd show up Somerlot in the fourth by going to third, as Johnson tossed out Baker, but the Terre Haute lad tied the score on him at third by a quick heave to Elberfeld.

Others Who Failed.

In the fifth Murphy and in the sixth Strunk reached that charmed section near Elberfeld, for all the good it did them, and in the seventh Murphy was spiked at the plate and Livingston doubled at second. The catcher drove the pill at McBride, whose toes to Ainsmith whipped the pill to Cunningham who walked on Livingston's ear, retiring the side.

Ainsmith was there with three pretty hits, including the wallop that counted the game. For an invalid he was a wonder and no one knew that between innings he used a throat gargle for his sore tonsils. That boy is game all the way through. He caught Johnson awfully, and—well, he proved he had the goods.

John Somerlot hit like Ty Cobb and ran as fast, beating out two pokes to Baker. In the field he was sure of everything and will continue to adorn the sack henceforth till he goes bad. Kid Elberfeld also got in two hits, and he grinned all evening over his performance.

One of the best bits of fielding was
